Your participation supports buildOn youth

For nearly 30 years, buildOn has worked to break the cycle of poverty, illiteracy, and low expectations through service and education. We do this by mobilizing youth from some of the most under-resourced schools in the United States to transform their communities through service learning and by empowering rural villages to build schools in developing countries.

buildOn's Service Learning Programs empower high school students across six U.S. cities, to do service that addresses critical issues, such as youth violence, hunger, and poverty. The same students serve globally by traveling with buildOn to work side-by-side with community members and construct schools in some of the economically poorest countries on the planet.

Through buildOn, more than 200,000 U.S. youth have contributed 2.4 million hours of service to their communities. 98% of these students graduate from high school compared to only 60% of their peers from the same schools. Across the globe, community members have contributed more than 3.8 million volunteer workdays to build more than 2,100 schools in some of the economically poorest countries on the planet. 285,000 children, parents, and grandparents attend these schools every day, and 50% of all students are female.
